Coaching is Teaching

Upcoming Events

- September 27th-SCIAA Middle School Girls Soccer Championship
- September 28th-SCIAA Winter Sports Coaches' Meeting
- September 29th-SCIAA High School Girls Soccer Championship
- September 30th-SCIAA High School Volleyball Championship

Coaches teach much more than the sport they are coaching — let's take a look at all they are responsible for handling.

1. Philosophy and ethics is vital training for athletes to learn acceptable and safe behavior and to abide by that philosophy. (Somebody down the line obviously failed with Johnny Manziel.)

2. Safety and Injury Prevention is critical, as the coach is frequently the first one to respond when one of his athletes is injured. He must know emergency care and how to prevent further injury. Additionally, he needs to be aware of unsafe equipment or other conditions.

3. Physical Conditioning is imperative for athletes to perform at their highest level, and it is up to the coach to implement the proper regimens for their athletes. It's important to use appropriate conditioning that prevents injuries to the greatest extent possible.

4. Growth and Development is a key area where the right leader can help guide players to readiness for competition.

5. Teaching and Communication is one of the most important aspects of a coach's job. He must be able to teach fundamentals, identify weaknesses and maximize the potential of each of his charges.

6. Sport Skills and Tactics are crucial in addition, as knowing these specific game tactics will help all team members to participate and perform optimally.

7. Organization and Administration is an integral part of the coach's job as they provide information, communicate needs and facilitate accountability to policies.

8. Evaluation is key. The best coaches can evaluate their players or prospects and decide whether they will be a good fit or not. They are also skilled at recruiting those players who will make the team better or the best in its sport.
